Sudden cardiac death in young survivors of corrected transposition of the great arteries. Survivors of corrected transposition of the great arteries (TGA) have an increased prevalence of ventricular arrhythmias and sudden cardiac death compared with the general population. Relevant variables for sudden cardiac death (SCD) in children, such as the grade of ventricular dysfunction, have not been established. We performed a study of SCD in young survivors of TGA between the ages of 1 and 18 years, using a comprehensive clinical, electrocardiographic, and echocardiographic assessment. We identified 11 patients with TGA, ages 1 to 18 years, who underwent a total of 13 surgical re-corrections with a mean follow-up of 9.2 +/- 3.6 years (range, 4.1 to 15.4 years). Pre- and postoperative study included a complete clinical examination, a 12-lead electrocardiogram, and an echocardiogram. Of the 13 surgical corrections, seven (54%) of the patients experienced SCD. All of these patients were asymptomatic preoperatively, and had no significant ventricular dysfunction. There was no association between the site of SCD and the type of surgical repair. We conclude that 1) sudden cardiac arrest is a not infrequent complication of TGA and 2) the incidence of SCD depends on the degree of left ventricular dysfunction, but not on the site of the systemic ventricle or the type of repair.

Our new issue, "After Bernie," is out now. Our questions are simple: what did Bernie accomplish, why did he fail, what is his legacy, and how should we continue the struggle for democratic socialism? Get a discounted print subscription today! In a recent report to the UN Security Council, the Secretary-General's Office addressed the "foreseeable consequences of protracted conflicts with implications for sustainable development." Like the majority of his reports, his analysis stops well short of doing what it should — namely, explaining how international finance is implicated. This failure is a rather glaring one. Why? Because the issues the Secretary-General raises — "poor governance" and "environmental damage" — bear a striking similarity to the narratives we hear from well-funded groups such as the International Crisis Group and Oxfam, which, in their advocacy for the largest corporations, often overlook other reasons for the violence and environmental degradation they are so instrumental

Body mass index and elevated blood pressure in male patients with chronic heart failure. An increase in body mass index (BMI) is associated with morbidity and mortality in patients with heart failure (HF). However, limited data are available on the relationship between BMI and blood pressure (BP) in male HF patients. Therefore, we analysed the relationship between BMI and BP in male HF patients. A total of 5,654 male HF patients who had not been treated with anti-rejection drugs, beta blockers or angiotensin receptor blockers were included. Initial and follow-up data collected within 4 weeks of and 6 months after hospitalization were used for the analysis. Systolic (SBP) and diastolic (DBP) BPs were measured by automated oscillometric method. Mean BMI was 26.8 ± 4.0 kg/m², and the mean follow-up period was 826 ± 479 days. SBP, DBP and the incidence of hypertension were higher in BMI ≥ 30 kg/m² group than in BMI 20-24.9 kg/m² group. After multivariate adjustment, the BMI ≥ 30 kg/m² group was associated with higher SBP (OR = 1.20, 95%CI: 1.07-1.33, P = 0.002) and DBP (OR = 1.18, 95%CI: 1.04-1.32, P = 0.004) than the BMI 20-24.9 kg/m² group. These findings were statistically significant even after the periodontal disease was adjusted. Male HF patients with elevated SBP and DBP are associated with a higher BMI. Periodontal disease and HF severity are not the reasons underlying the relationship between BMI and BP.
