Category:Video game development softwareQ: Is there a way of simulating a "search" function in a XNA game? Using a System.Drawing.Image (or Bitmap) class to specify a game's world as a single image, it would be possible to snap to a viewpoint, snap to a given world position, snap to the camera, etc. But is there a way of doing this, while leaving the gameplay running from an indexed array of GameObjects in memory? There would be a simple routine in the Game class: public void UpdateWorld(float delta) { world.Update(delta); } Each GameObject has a Position with respect to the world, and a Vector2 position with respect to the camera (which is relative to the world coordinates). When the user mouses-over one of these 1cb139abd
