Article content Justin Trudeau's government has been caught once again on the wrong side of the climate debate, its latest in a series of decisions and announcements that have alienated environmental groups and other supporters of his leadership. In a move that some opposition parties are pledging to use against the Liberals in the next election, the federal government has decided to pull out of the Paris climate-change accord. The decision was issued in a terse statement from the Prime Minister's Office, without elaboration, and doesn't say when the government will withdraw. "Canada's position on the Paris Agreement on climate change has not changed. Canada is reviewing the agreement to see if it will help Canadians," wrote officials in the Prime Minister's Office. "The United States has elected to withdraw from the agreement. The Liberal government will join them," said the statement. The announcement came just two days after the provincial government in Ontario announced it was cutting ties with the federal government's climate change program, Ecofiscal Policy.

Q: Asterisk Caching I've installed Asterisk and have set it up with a MySQL database, but I can't seem to figure out how to make Asterisk update it's tables once per hour. Can anyone point me in the right direction? A: This is not only possible, but is the default behavior. If you create an asterisk configuration file with your database information, you will find the asterisk-settime command, which will be executed every time the Asterisk daemon is started. It will look like: `$ asterisk-settime -s db_name -u user -p pass -h host -l log_file` You can find detailed documentation about using the asterisk-settime command in the Asterisk Admin Reference Manual. You can also use MySQL's built-in `CURRENT_TIMESTAMP` to save the current timestamp to the database. The asterisk-settime command will only work on the latest version of Asterisk (currently 13.x).
