Brainz Group: Joop User: JxJx Well I am still getting into this game, played a few matches online few days back and it was fun enough since was the first FFA I played in a LONG time. However, when I got home, I saw it was compromised: So my question is: is this a hack or something else? I tried and it doesn't seem like any single server is compromised as yet, but maybe I missed something (I also don't know the right terminology for this, so be gentle). The infected server is pretty much unplayable at the moment, but luckily there is a file on the server that contains all the private keys for all players. All private keys will be identical for people on the same server, right? My initial thoughts were that maybe some software for cheats or hacks is in use to get the gold out of the server, but I'm not sure where to start in looking into it. Note that in this case the user's data is still safe, the server and client just isn't usable for the moment. Any assistance would be greatly appreciated! And most importantly, WHAT IS GOING ON? A: This is a hack. Just like the wikipedia page says, they do something like take your settings, transfer them to a different server and you'll appear on that server instead of your current server. That's it. Lucky you found a list of (bad) websites. You'll have to filter the list yourself for 'jx2 hack', most of them are just forums that spread rumors or forums about such kind of hacks. Personally I would look for other people who are playing on your server. If they use a proxy or something, you can check the ips and user names to see if it's the same person. That said, your data is safe. [Glucose metabolism in skeletal muscles. The glycolysis vs. glycogenesis balance in adult rat muscles]. The rates of glycolysis and glycogenesis were examined in extracts of solubilized muscle proteins from adult rat soleus and extensor digitorum longus muscles. On the one hand, glycogen isolated from soleus and extensor digitorum longus muscles is composed by 40% and 30%, respectively, of 570a42141b
