(Photo by Ezra Shaw/Getty Images) One of the rules that the Golden State Warriors have been pretty consistent with since taking over as the reigning champion in 2015 is to only play the best available talent. They're a complete team, but they also have a lot of depth that allows them to be good even if certain key players aren't on the court. It's really helped the team in their run to a record 17-1, but there are still some holes in the roster that need to be filled, as anyone who watched them in the playoffs can attest to. It should be noted that, at the very least, five of the players at the top of this list have reached the playoffs in the past two seasons. Stephen Curry, Draymond Green, Kevin Durant, Klay Thompson, and Andre Iguodala have all been to the NBA Finals in the past two years, and Kevin Durant has made multiple All-Star teams, while the others have made significant contributions to the Warriors' success on the court. However, Golden State hasn
