This book will introduce you to this powerful tool. With the Internet, free electronic commerce is becoming more and more common. The Internet is about sharing. The sharing of ideas, resources, products, services, and information. The sharing of knowledge, and information. The sharing of books, and music, and videos, and photographs. The sharing of products from one manufacturer with one product to another. And the sharing of knowledge from one expert to another. In the future there will be even more sharing. There will be electronic commerce. Electronic commerce will be more about sharing, than selling. We can look forward to a time when online purchases will have more in common with instant messaging than with e-mail. .NET and Java are both the product of their time. They grew from a new generation of software engineering, from a new generation of computer programmers. Both are products of the Internet. Neither can be taken for granted. With over 1 billion lines of Java software in the world, with over 5 million lines of C# software, a programming language will either grow and grow, or it will be shoved aside. Before their adoption into mainstream computing, ASP and .NET were alternatives to the
