Your audio device has a clock. If it does not, you can force it to use one using a trial and error method. If you get stuck, check the NTP (Network Time Protocol) page on the Internet. It has a lot of information on this problem. Your audio clock time may be set at more than an hour off from the video. For example, if you have your audio set to 7:15, then your video program will start at 7:15, and it will continue to play until 7:30. When you watch your video at home, you only see the video for the time of 7:15. When you watch your video at work, on the other hand, you are missing the first 15 minutes of the program. Your video source is very slow. When your video source is slow, the output audio will be
