Q: How to import proxy-aware profile in Java applications? I want to understand, how it's possible to use proxy aware profile in Java applications. We have developed in Java application, and we use libraries with the same license, for example, Solr and Lucene. All these libraries are specifically binary libraries, and so in the past, we have used JNA, and so we've used the following line in the code: `NativeLibraryLoader loader = NativeLoaderFactory.getNativeLoader(className);` but this is not correct (that is why we are moving to the later version of libraries, in which we don't need to use `NativeLoaderLoader`, because it was deleted - in previous version, JNA was the only way to get the first class version of the library). So the question is: How to import proxy-aware profile in Java application? A: As @koop answered, the way to do it is create a own "native" library instead of using JNA or `NativeLoaderLoader`. This additional native library would extend the `NativeClassLoader`, and would contain all classes from the other libraries, like the aforementioned Solr and Lucene. The members of the Palmetto Expressway Authority are a disparate collection of local and state government bosses, from small town county executives to Cape Coral Mayor Gino DiVito, a San Antonio developer and three developers in Atlanta, Georgia. New leaders from these divergent places must contend with everything from a potential 2006 vote of no confidence by state legislators to a road project already delayed by a lawsuit. In front of a mostly empty auditorium, the members of the authority voted unanimously last month to install a new leader. That person should be appointed by Mayor DiVito, who selected Kevin Millette, a 31-year veteran of the San Antonio police department, according to the published minutes. Now it's a matter of setting his priorities. "We're actually struggling," said Dan Allen, the Palmetto Expressway's executive director. "We don't have an ironclad plan for how to go forward." The Palmetto Expressway is a 45-mile stretch of mostly four lanes, from Interstate 95 in Tampa to Interstate 75 in Charlotte, N.C., stretching south of the city of Palmetto. The ambitious $2 billion project has been years in the

A novel mutation of the CYP11B2 gene in an individual with precocious puberty and primary congenital adrenal hyperplasia. We describe a girl with familial premature pubarche, primary adrenal insufficiency, and a form of congenital adrenal hyperplasia due to an alteration in the CYP11B2 gene. Analysis of the available family members revealed that the father had a similar clinical profile. The index patient was a female with primary adrenal insufficiency and short stature, who developed early puberty at the age of 11. She was tall for age and overweight for her age. Evaluation of adrenocortical function revealed low cortisol and low aldosterone levels. In view of these findings, the girl was treated with glucocorticoid replacement. In addition, genetic studies were performed because of her short stature and low cortisol level. Molecular analysis revealed that the father had a nonsense mutation (F99Y) of the CYP11B2 gene. This mutation results in the production of a partially active protein lacking key structural elements of the enzyme. Our patient's phenotype fits well into the estimated defect in biallelic mutant alleles with nonsense mutations of the CYP11B2 gene.
