A major reason for this has been the phenomenal growth in the automotive industry, which has created a huge demand for small modular conveyor systems for car parts. Bajaj Auto India Ltd and Varsha Car Components Pvt Ltd, two companies with a combined annual turnover of about ₹1,500 crore, achieved a joint first by winning the 2016 Green Conveyor Award at the Green Conveyor Expo 2017 held at Singapore, in recognition of their modular conveyor systems. The awards, organised by the Clean India Foundation with support from the ministry of environment, have been giving out awards to 'smart solutions' for various industries for the past three years. The Bajaj Auto India team got this award for their chain conveyor system. It was nominated for its innovative design, compact size and ability to handle small and large items as well as for its low maintenance and energy consumption. Its parts and accessories are made in India, thus reducing the impact on the environment, and it can run on vegetable oil. Varsha Car Components will be able to produce its components using the modular system. The award was handed over to Varsha during a short ceremony on the sidelines of the expo. The company has already started mass production of its chain conveyor systems, and has plans to export its products to Australia and the Middle East.
