* `www.graphicdesignbypeter.com/photoshop/Photoshop` * `www.kendaclay.com/photoshop-tutorials/photoshop-intro-beginner` ## InDesign As their name says, InDesign creates files in InDesign. However, the term "InDesign" has more meaning than creating only.indd files. InDesign has a few different functions. Unlike Photoshop, where a major focus is manipulating pictures, InDesign's functionality is more important than just the image manipulation. InDesign has many other functions and provides a number of tools that are not found in most image-editing applications. Because it is a complex application, InDesign is best used by professionals. Even some of the typical "over the shoulder" tutorials are specifically geared towards more experienced users. InDesign's main purpose is to create layout, marketing, and communications documents of all sizes: letters, business cards, brochures, and flyers. InDesign is used by graphic designers, print shops, and publishers as well as those working in other industries. From a business perspective, InDesign is useful because it enables people in other departments such as marketing and sales to generate and create documents, spreadsheets, and plans. InDesign uses a page-based structure where every page is its own entity. Pages can then be placed, and new pages can be created by a page menu on the tool bar. Photoshop's layout tools enable you to place shapes on the page, or to create shapes around any text. You can then control the text that comes with the shape; its color, size, and font; and the shape's border and background. InDesign's page-based structure is more robust than Photoshop's. You don't have to erase and re-export to create a different object; you can just simply add a new page and you are good to go. The page menu also has more tools and ways to control the content. InDesign's page menu also enables you to send the document to different printers with multiple options as to how the pages should be printed. Another difference between InDesign and Photoshop is that InDesign allows you to import in a variety of formats. It will open files created in Adobe Illustrator. Its format manager includes Adobe Frame Maker, Illustrator, Photoshop, and Quark XPress. Because InDesign's page-based structure is so robust, print shops tend to

Q: Is it possible to use Mockito to return a List? I know that it is possible to return an Integer value from a method, and even a primitive type. But is it possible to return a List? I've tried to do the following: @Test public void testAddNumber() { //given int number = 42; int[] numbers = {1, 2, 3, 4}; //when List result = test.add(number, numbers); //then assertThat(result.size()).isEqualTo(4); assertThat(result.get(0)).isEqualTo(number); assertThat(result.get(1)).isEqualTo(number); assertThat(result.get(2)).isEqualTo(number); assertThat(result.get(3)).isEqualTo(number); assertThat(result).containsExactly(1, 2, 3, 4); } However, mockito keeps complaining about my assert calls about Lists: java.lang.AssertionError: Expected: containsExactly(1, 2, 3, 4) Actual: containsExactly(1, 2, 3, 4) I've looked online for examples, and even some questions on here, but all of them involve a single item being added to a list. Is this a bug in Mockito? Is it even possible to return Lists? If so, how? A: You can't, at least not in a compatible way. Mockito simply doesn't support that. You could try EasyMock, but I would say that your assertion is misleading and that it should read: assertThat(Arrays.asList(1, 2, 3, 4)).containsExactly(1, 2, 3, 4); require'spec_helper' describe Merb::Filter::IntegerLength do it'should be a Filter' do expect(Merb::Filter.is_a?(Merb::Filter::IntegerLength)).to be_truthy end it'should correctly

In recent years, a powdery toner has been widely used for an electrophotographic image forming method by the use of an electrostatic image receiving medium or the like. A toner is obtained by a kneading/pulverization process. If a kneading or pulverization mold is used for pulverization, a large quantity of an expensive mold material is consumed for producing the same toner, and thereby the production cost becomes disadvantageously high. In addition, the kneading or pulverization process generates a large quantity of a fine powder. Since a powdery toner made of such a fine powder flows into a recording apparatus, for example, a developing unit or a carrier in the recording apparatus, the flows are caught by a cleaning blade in some cases. This phenomenon is called "toner filming". If the toner filming occurs on a surface of a photoreceptor to which an electrostatic latent image is formed, image defects occur due to the toner filming. In view of the above, an attempt to reduce the powdery toner is made in which a toner is formed by depositing particles of toner precursors that are obtained by polymerizing a monomer in the presence of a stabilizer on a surface of a support, and a toner image is formed by using the toner formed by this process. By the way, when an electrostatic latent image is formed on a surface of a photoreceptor, a developer for forming the latent image is required to have an excellent chargeability. As the developer for use for a dry toner, a two-component developer is used in many cases. The two-component developer contains a toner and a carrier. In addition, a magnetic toner and a non-magnetic toner are also known. Furthermore, a process cartridge that uses an electrophotographic image forming method is provided with the above-mentioned image bearing member and a developing unit that is mounted on the process cartridge and stores a developer therein. The developing unit and the process cartridge are formed as a unit. In the electrophotographic image forming method, a desired amount of developer stored in the developing unit is supplied to the surface of the image bearing member to form an image. In addition, toner in the developing unit is consumed while the image is formed. Therefore, the developer stored in the developing unit is made to be exhausted. The developing unit is provided with a toner supply
