"We developed this idea out of the belief that the most enjoyable gameplay experience is usually the result of the most accurate simulations of the real-world action," stated Kwame Parker, FIFA Lead Gameplay Designer. "A player's experience of authentic, unpredictable movement in the air and around the ball is an important part of the gameplay and the development team is committed to delivering top-quality gameplay that captures the personality of real-world football." The FIFA Ultimate Team Game Engine leverages this human-quality data to improve gameplay, simulating each player with an unprecedented level of individuality and accuracy. It delivers a higher level of player performance than any previous iteration, allowing players to more accurately control the ball and compete with other players. Additionally, using the cutting-edge technology of "HyperMotion" mimics the true sensations of players at different stages of their career, such as the speed of youngsters or the agility of older players. The new dribbling system uses a player's position in the context of their teammates, meaning players possess different abilities and are able to use them more effectively. "The fact that the ball can be controlled and used in a unique way helps to differentiate new styles of play," explained Parker, FIFA Ultimate Team (FIFA Ultimate Team Game Engine leverages this human-quality data to improve gameplay, simulating each players of their career, such as the speed of youngsters or the agility of older players.
