Image copyright Getty Images Travel company First Choice has said it is in talks with potential investors to sell itself. In a trading update, it said it was in talks with unidentified "strategic and financial investors" about a possible sale. Meanwhile, revenues at its flights business are up more than 6% so far this year, but First Choice said it was not "highly confident" about the outlook for 2021. The company's shares were 3% lower at 569p at 12:31 BST. It also said its chief executive, Caroline Thomson, would leave in February, a move which will be effective from 1 April. But it said the transition, which would involve a "comprehensive search for a new CEO", would not result in any change to its strategy. Under First Choice's current strategy, it aims to keep its low fares and the customer loyalty programme, Club First, which is similar to Virgin and BA's MileagePlus. It will also try to pick up a "significant minority stake in a highly profitable digital brand" in 2021. Mr Goodwin said: "Our future now depends on identifying the right strategic and financial investors who share our long term ambition of a well balanced strategy that creates shareholder value, recognises the investment we have made in improving the levels of service at our core brands, and enables us to invest in what we believe are valuable strategic assets." The firm added that its joint venture with Thomas Cook, Tui, had recently won a 10-year licence from the Civil Aviation Authority to operate in the discount off-peak leisure market, which it said would add £150m in additional revenues to its existing business. First Choice previously ran Aer Lingus, which was merged with its parent in 2007. Thomas Cook was taken over by First Choice - the firm's joint venture with the Indian, Mauritius-based Tata Group - in 2007.The present invention relates to polymeric compounds that are useful as a component of plastics, paints and inks, and as a surface modifying agent for inorganic surfaces.
