The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), which needs no introduction, is already the largest federal agency. It spent $13.1 billion in 2013, including $2.5 billion in construction and $1.8 billion in goods and services. Its budget is expected to increase to about $14.4 billion in 2014. That’s only 3.2 percent of the total federal budget, and nowhere near the $100-plus billion per year that the Department of Defense spends. The DHS oversees more than 240 separate agencies and 5,000 units, which together form about 40 percent of the government’s total workforce. In fiscal year 2013, the DHS spent about $58 billion, including $19 billion for construction. That’s about 11.7 percent of the federal budget, though it’s already nearly two-thirds higher than the CDC’s budget. In a year, the DHS will easily outspend the CDC. In five years, the DHS will be spending nearly ten times as much as the CDC. The CDC’s budget is up even from last year. In fiscal year 2012, Congress appropriated a
