DVDRip. Memento; Gratis; VOSTFR; Accès direct.Q: C++ Parameter pack expansion This code compiles fine: `int a = 42; static_cast(a) = 97; static_cast(&a) = 98;` However, when I change the `static_cast` line to be `static_cast(&a) = {97};` it causes a compile error as shown below. It seems that the first parameter pack expansion of `{97}` is not expanded. How can I use `{97}` as a parameter pack of a function call? `/usr/bin/c++.exe: In function 'void function()': /usr/bin/c++.exe:13:2: error: '97' is not a valid template-argument because '97' is not an array of reference-qualified type 'int&' A: It seems the compiler tries to apply the second template expansion (i.e. {97}) to the parameter pack, which then doesn't have a type. You could use constexpr instead of`

C++17's `std::array`: `#include <template void do_stuff(std::index_sequence) { static_cast&>(*this)[i] = 0; } int main() { do_stuff(std::make_index_sequence{}); } A: It seems that the first parameter pack expansion of {97} is not expanded. That is exactly what this does. First, you have: static_cast(&a) = {97}; This is not a single argument of a function, but a single argument of a function call, like so: static_cast(&a) = 97; Why? Because {97} is a braced-init-list, not a parameter pack.`
