For example, I want to be able to query on every element of an object. I have a query string that looks like this: /get/people/id/name/locale/ So, to filter on the id, I call var params = { id: '2' }; get('/get/people/id/name/locale/', params); But now, I want to add filtering by "city" (or any other element) as well. I have a separate object that looks like this: { city: 'New York' } So, I created another parameter, and just added another, just like this: var params = { id: '2', city: 'New York' }; get('/get/people/id/name/locale/', params); This didn't work. This returns a 400 error, as the input doesn't match the request. I'm guessing I need to convert the parameters from strings to objects, so I could do: var params = { id: { id: '2' }, city: 'New York' }; get('/get/people/id/name/locale/', params); But I'm not sure how to go about that. So, how do I convert query string params from strings to objects? A: If you try to open a /get/people/id/name/locale/page with the following URL: get('/get/people/id/name/locale/', {foo: 'bar'}) Then you'll get a 404 error, because the server is expecting an object with key names: { foo: 'bar' } By the way, you could just use object notations in your URL, like so: get('/get/people/id/name/locale/id?', {foo: 'bar'}) And the URL decoded object structure would be
