Plaskett, who has been working with Premier Stephen McNeil to help position the province for offshore oil exploration, made the decision Thursday. "I'm going to step down as deputy premier and as minister of environment and that will take effect immediately," Plaskett told reporters gathered at the legislature. "It's been a hard decision for me to make. I would have really liked to have served out my term and go for the next one. "But I believe it's in the best interest of myself, my family and the province that I make this decision." Plaskett issued a brief statement thanking people from around the province for their support and encouragement during her time in politics. She also thanked Premier Stephen McNeil for his "great stewardship and leadership" and said she would continue to work on issues in Cape Breton, "including the commitment to address health and safety, jobs and the economy in rural Nova Scotia." McNeil and Premier-designate Michelle Mungall said Plaskett's decision to not seek re-election was "a very difficult decision." "She is somebody who has been very loyal and a friend to all of us in the past and we're very proud of the work that she did in the environment portfolio," McNeil said
