Cucumber (Cucumis sativus L.) is a typical cucurbits species. Its seedling can adapt to water shortage by increasing their water use efficiency and water use efficiency. Roots are vital organs in plant and play important role in stress adaptation. In order to further study the mechanism of stress adaption in seedling, and the effect of root lesion on water acquisition, excision, sucking, and growing under mechanical stress were carried out. The results showed that the length and fresh weight of mechanical stressed seedling were significantly lower than those of the control (PDescription One of the most important features of abstract art is that is does not reflect actual life. The realistic painting, no matter how much skill has been applied, never looks exactly like the object it is supposed to depict. Abstract art does not look like anything in the world, but

Fourteen Sarcocystis sp. sarcocysts were found in the myocardium, mesentery and skeletal muscles of 17 out of 20 (85.0%) young paca from the Cariri region of the State of Pará, North Brazil. The sarcocysts were enclosed by a cyst wall of varying thickness, 96-203 µm thick, and covered by a sporocyst wall of 7-21 µm thick. The sarcocysts measured 17-30 × 16-21 µm. The thin-walled sarcocyst contained a large cyst residuum of 10-21 µm in diameter. The sporocyst wall is 11-16 µm thick and contains numerous pores varying in size, 2-7 µm in diameter. The ovoidal sporozoites were 4.6-6.5 × 2.4-2.9 µm, with a distinct, pointed anterior region, and a tapered posterior bulb. Sporocyst wall-forming sacs develop at the anterior region of the sporozoites. The greatest degree of morphological differences was observed between the two morphotypes. Morphotype I was characterised by a larger body (10.6-13.1 µm long) and smaller (8.5-9.6 µm) sporocysts compared to the second morphotype, which was
