Q: Get url from url_builder I want to print the URL from the url_builder. I know how to get it from string. I know how to use render_to_string and render_to_stringio, but I want to use the url_builder. Not that I have to pass a render_to_stringio to it, I just want to use it as it is. This is the code I use to get the URL from string r = requests.get(' f = open("test.txt", "wb") f.write(r.text) f.close() I don't know what url_builder should be used. This is the error I am getting File "/home/student/Desktop/pythons/theysay/src/theysay/models.py", line 111, in for i in urls: TypeError:'module' object is not callable A: You can do this: f = open("test.txt", "wb") req = urllib.request.Request("") urllib.request.urlopen(req).read().decode() f.write(req.get_url()) f.close() Time to get your Jags on because it's time to watch the 2011 Jags Resignation Rumor Watch. Let's have a look at what's been floating around the waters of the Twittersphere and beyond this morning. Who's to doff their cap to Omar Kolwogi? Who will doff their cap to..... Omar Kolwogi? Where to begin? Well, let's start at the top shall we? After watching the Jaguars first preseason game we can already see that this team isn't going to be as bad as some people are making it out to be. And that's a good thing because we don't need to pretend that we're watching the Indianapolis Colts. Let's talk first about the offense. After watching the Jaguars first preseason game, I'm sure more than a few people left the game thinking "Well, at least the Jaguars have a running back. That's a good thing." But,
