Fluorescent antibody test for the diagnosis of toxocara antibodies in animals, particularly dogs. To compare a new fluorescent antibody (FAT) test for the diagnosis of infections with Toxocara canis with previously established tests used to detect the presence of Toxocara antibodies in pet dogs and puppies and to compare the FAT with the enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) and the passive hemagglutination (PH) test. Prospective study. 1,400 serum samples from various animal species that were submitted to the Diagnostic Laboratory of the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine, University of Utrecht, for immune serology. FAT, ELISA, and PH tests were used to detect serum antibodies against T. canis. When serum samples were tested by FAT, 7.9% had a titre of 1:16 or greater, compared with a titre of 16% using the ELISA and a titre of 18% using the PH test. In the specific diagnosis of infections caused by T. canis in dogs and puppies, the FAT test proved to be more sensitive than the ELISA or the PH test. However, when tested in other animals, the FAT test had a lower sensitivity than the ELISA and PH test.

Repair of the ascending aorta by endovascular reconstruction with a self-expanding type AI nitinol stent: a case report. A 43-year-old woman with a history of Möbius-strip syndrome presented to our hospital with chest pain during activities. This case study presents successful deployment and 6-month follow-up of a self-expanding type AI nitinol stent, which was designed for the purpose of aortic aneurysm repair. The stent was successfully deployed by T- and Y-stenting with additional iliac stenting. During the 6-month follow-up period, the patient did not have any signs of endoleak, thrombosis, or aneurysm growth. However, the patient reported a slightly painful sensation under the right hip, which was suspected to be caused by stent displacement. This report demonstrates the feasibility of the use of the self-expanding type AI nitinol stent in endovascular reconstruction of the ascending aorta.

Q: Fetch the value of a random variable, from another random variable I have two random variables $X \sim \text{Exp}(0.5)$ and $Y \sim \text{Gamma}(0.5, 0.75)$ I am interested in the value of $Z = X + Y$. Is there an analytical way to find this value? Thank you. A: In general, I do not think there is an analytical way, but this may be a special case. Using the inversion formula for a gamma random variable, we have

$Z = X + Y = e^{-Y} \frac{X}{X+Y} + X = Y \frac{e^{-X}}{X+Y} + X$, and so $Z = X + Y$ has the pmf

$\pi(Z) = \pi(X)\pi(Y) \left(\frac{X+Y}{X+Y} \right)^Z$. In this case, the two terms $\frac{X+Y}{X+Y}$ cancel, giving $\pi(Z) = \pi(X)\pi(Y) \left(\frac{X}{X+Y} \right)^Z$. Kolo Touré Kolo Touré (born 28 May 1981 in Dakar) is a Senegalese football midfielder.
