While the U.S. has officially abandoned this territory since 1955, nearly 200 live-aboard yachts work the waters and, to a certain extent, the people. Mark Anderson is a former merchant mariner who is now a radio host and founder of Sea Harps, a 24-hour music station in Old Point Comfort. "If you can float, we'll play your music," he says. Anderson grew up in the same small South Carolina town as blues legend Johnny Cash. Johnny Cash was a granddad Like many kids in the South, Anderson was fascinated with Johnny Cash. Anderson sang the songs on his guitar, and his uncle, his grandmother and his grandmother's mother all listened to him. "Johnny Cash was a granddad," Anderson says. "I listened to him when I was a little boy and carried that around with me as a kid until I had my own family and kids of my own." The North Carolina coast is part of a unique maritime culture Anderson's parents grew up in Mississippi. They eventually moved to the South Carolina coast where he grew up with a passion for the sea. He started work as a ship captain in 2001 and eventually became a yachting host and DJ for Sea Harps. Anderson says the North Carolina coast is part of a unique maritime culture where everyone knows each other. He says the people who live on these boats are a blend of whites, blacks and Latinos, which is rare for the U.S. "When you're from Charleston or New York or Chicago, you're going to be interested in anything that's happening in the world. Here, we know a lot of the history of the sea. That's something that this

You may be your stepfather or mother's father or your wife's mother. These are the people who know all about you, how you think and how you feel. In the case of the latter, the parents of your wife, they may know what is happening in your marriage and your home. Some of them may be so intrusive and persistent that they expect you to tell them all about your dreams and hopes. Examples: A father is always telling a son how much he admires him and loves him. The father of a child always tells the mother of a child that he is proud of her. They are both assiduously informing them of how great they are and how they wish that the child were their own. They miss nothing and no information is too trivial. It is as if they want to make sure that the child gets the best possible start in life. A mother constantly tells her child that she thinks he is great and wishes he had her looks. A father constantly congratulates his son on the progress of his education and his career. He thinks that his son is a very big success. A stepfather tells a stepdaughter how attractive and wonderful she is. He is determined to make her think well of herself. A mother constantly tells her daughter that she is successful in her career. A father constantly points out to his son that he is smarter than him. A mother often comments on the good qualities of her son's girlfriend and her family. Parents should, of course, let their children make up their own minds about themselves and their problems. As children grow older they will usually give them more independence. But at times, if they are in danger of being influenced too much, the parents should take steps to protect them. The word "trivia" means any facts or information that are unimportant or uninteresting. Examples: "Trivia" was used as the title of a series of World War II movies, showing the ground war in Europe. They had a lot of intrigue and mixed up the facts. "Trivial" is the word for an

Project Summary/Abstract: This proposal is for the renewal of our T32 Training Grant in Cardiovascular Disease Epidemiology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. There are an unprecedented number of trained epidemiologists in the country with degrees in the social, behavioral, and environmental sciences. This has caused a bottleneck in the production of epidemiologists who understand the importance of incorporating advances in cellular and molecular biology with traditional epidemiological methods to understand the etiology and pathogenesis of cardiovascular disease (CVD). The training program seeks to remedy this pipeline problem by training junior and senior scientists in the area of CVD epidemiology. The program's research-intensive nature and the broad base of faculty mentors who have strong research programs in CVD epidemiology provides trainees with the necessary training to successfully pursue independent research careers in CVD epidemiology. The proposed training program will continue to be integrated with the already successful research activities of the UW Department of Epidemiology and Public Health. The goal of the training program is to prepare scientists to conduct rigorous and innovative epidemiologic studies that incorporate knowledge in relevant areas of basic biology and genomics to identify risk factors, mediators, and causes of CVD. The overarching goal is to create the next generation of cardiovascular disease epidemiologists who can translate advances in basic science into the development of strategies to prevent and treat CVD. The research training curriculum of the program is based on the following conceptual model: i) epidemiologic methods to determine the epidemiologic relationship of risk factors and CVD; ii) biological mechanisms to explain the influence of genetic and biological factors on CVD risk factors, and CVD outcomes; iii) the appropriate design of studies to address important CVD-related questions; iv)
