What you describe is really too much for a typical text classifier/natural language processor that will require a lot of resources and training. If you do do that, you might just as well use an API that already uses the Microsoft Speech API to be able to work with MSSpeechService. Q: Accessing columns from one data frame as variables for another in R I have two data frames, df1 and df2. I'd like to create a third data frame where the four columns of df1 (which have some common with df2) are used as variables for the columns in df2. This is my first R attempt at this and I'm having difficulty. Here's the code I'm using, which I'd like to replace with something more efficient: df3
