CALGARY—Caregivers of children with autism and developmental delays will have more access to respite services in Alberta under a new program launched on Thursday that aims to help the same families cope with their taxing duties. “It’s often described as the most difficult job in the world,” said Alberta Community Services Minister Lois MacKenzie at a ribbon-cutting ceremony to launch the new autism and developmental disability service. “It’s amazing to learn there’s a concept called ‘caregiving’ because for the families, this is every day, every day of their lives,” she said. The $18-million respite program provides funding to non-profit social service agencies that can help families deal with the weight of their duties by offering respite services that range from in-home respite to travelling to different locations. MacKenzie said that the goal of the program is to make a difference for families so they can care for their children and “access all the services they need to improve their lives.” “What we know is that they spend hours and hours, every day, supporting their children and caring for their children’s needs,” she said. “This program will support them so they can live their life and do the things that matter to them.” The program is being implemented in Edmonton, Leduc and Grande Prairie, while MacKenzie said she hopes to have it in place in Calgary by the fall of 2017. Launching the program in Alberta was also meant to help influence funding decisions for the federal government as a way to stimulate areas of the economy that are suffering, such as health care. The respite program is open to all non-profit agencies that provide services and support to people with developmental disabilities and autism. An executive director can be hired, but the main

Browser is often recommended when a user wants to browse the Internet. However, it's not always the best option when you want to type in a website address. Yandex. Browser does come with suggestions, but these only work for German, English, and Chinese languages. I was about to open the Yandex. Browser settings, and all of a sudden, a new tab appeared in the browser with the list of suggestions. This list has five useful categories, including: - Location by Yandex - Geolocation by Yandex - You - Networks You can search for any of these. And voilà! Yandex. Browser suggests the desired information instantly. There are also certain pages you can go to to toggle on and off certain features. Some examples are toggling on a local search or hotspot, tab darkening, or choosing whether to display full page or just part of it. A few other pages can be found on the Yandex. Browser website. The main advantage of this is that you get a faster, more convenient search experience. The interface is pretty intuitive and user-friendly, while the text has been optimized to clearly display the suggested text. It's definitely a convenient way to go, and that's no wonder it's the default browser for millions of people worldwide. Yandex. Browser website There's a specific usage that often arises in online conversations, especially in web forums. When someone is clarifying a little bit of text, they often add a word that makes the conversation sound nicer. The issue is that the words are often included because they're actually a part of the text, which is a bit problematic. A more convenient option would be to just automatically add the word, leaving the original text untouched. The downloader I've included below does that, and it's called Words. It should operate

Visualization of morphological change in tuberculous human lung by magnetic resonance imaging. The purpose of the present study was to determine whether it is possible to assess in vivo morphological changes, in tuberculous human lung, by magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). In addition, MRI was used to determine whether it is possible to determine the area of intrathoracic tuberculosis infection by measuring the diffusion of water molecules into the lesion. A spin-echo sequence was used with a spin-echo time of 110 ms, a repetition time of 1000 ms, and a two-dimensional echo time of 2 ms (15 cm field-of-view, 256 X 256 matrix, 1 mm section thickness, and two excitations). In situ lung MRI was performed with a 0.5 Tesla superconducting magnet and a laparoscopic device for image guidance, and axial sections were obtained in the upper and lower lobes of the right and left lungs. Twenty patients with probable or probable or definite active pulmonary tuberculosis were evaluated. The lesion, which was characterized on the basis of volume, shape, margins, and appearance of the cystic area, was characterized in accordance with the uninvolved lung. The MRI findings were assessed in conjunction with those of two-dimensional computed tomography, histologic study of the resected specimens, and radiography. In all 20 patients, the lesion was visible on T1-weighted images and T2-weighted images. The average lesion volume was 81.4 +/- 21.1 (SD) mL. The lesion was oval and showed a large cystic area in the T2-weighted image. The average length of the tumor in the T2-weighted image was 17.3 +/- 3.9 mm (mean +/- SD) and the tumor was measured at a maximum width of
