“We've revolutionized the way that AI reacts to player actions and applied it to all player animations,” explains FIFA developer FIFA World Cup Interactive. “The result is a new generation of fun, authentic and hard-hitting football with enhanced reactions and reactions times, and an AI that responds like a real player.” The introduction of HyperMotion Technology brings a new level of simulation to the sport. The on-field action is now more realistic, with the player’s movement on the ball more accurate. Players are now more likely to fall when tackled and react to the ball more realistically, with their feet landing much closer to their targets. And more comebacks are possible than in previous FIFA games, as players react quicker to recover possession. Now you can see and feel the impact of head and shoulder contacts as players collide, an essential element of the sport. In addition to the enhanced simulation of the sport, the game also features a collection of improved visuals, dynamic camera angles and a fully revamped graphics engine. On-field visuals are now more detailed, bringing new life to stadiums and viewing angles. New lights have been added to bring more detailed lighting effects and bring the pitch to life. Most importantly, FIFA World Cup Interactive has again invested in the gameplay itself, allowing players to move the ball in totally new and unexpected ways. The game introduces a new dribble control system and the ability to use the ball with head and foot, similar to a rugby tackle. Players can now achieve a new level of vision and control, by passing the ball by running around and evading defenders. These tweaks make FIFA World Cup Interactive’s most advanced game yet, and place football at the heart of its premier competition once again.
