"The gameplay and animation we've created will be indistinguishable from how our world class athletes perform and move in real life," said Andrew Yip, EA SPORTS Creative Director. "The technical aspects of the gameplay, delivered on the platform of this year's iteration of FIFA, allow players to re-create skills and actions that you would experience in a real-life match." FIFA 22 includes a new "My Player" feature, which allows players to personalise their career, and make their player on the field look, feel and play as they would like. The new My Player feature includes a variety of visualizations, such as players' Speed Rating, Career Potential, Teammates, Skills, Team Chemistry, and more. It will also integrate data from EA SPORTS Dynamic Yield – recently announced for Madden NFL 20 – which allows fans to personalize players' traits. "Real players, real life games," said David Rutter, Executive Producer on FIFA. "We've been telling fans on social that we wanted to make the feeling of being a top-level athlete as realistic as possible. We now have HyperMotion technology that brings that experience to life. "Anyone that has played FIFA 19 or Madden NFL 19 knows there is something special about being inside a living, breathing version of the sport. The recognition of player movement, reaction and aggression in-game is a testament to how skilled the gameplay team are in replicating the emotion, life and realism of the sport. With this year's versions of FIFA we want to bring fans closer to the games they love, and introduce player-centric features that capture what it's like to play football. We're excited to announce "My Player", which is the first time that fans will be able to personalise their players to suit their play style. We're confident that together we can help fans build a gaming experience that continues to be the one and only 'Real Life Football Game' on the market." The new "My Player" feature on FIFA 22 will also include MyPlayer Coins which can be used to customise players' traits. These features are supported across all formats, including Online, Mobile, and PC. Players will be able to choose from 1 million traits available through EA SPORTS Traits. Further, fans can choose how their players look
