China's recent actions in the South China Sea reflect its desire to put an end to US hegemony in the region. This is a practice that had been going on for decades and has accelerated in the past few years as Beijing and Washington continue to face more growing tensions in the South China Sea. China's actions include hosting the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and negotiating with the Philippines, Malaysia, Brunei and Indonesia to have the International Court of Arbitration rule in its favor on the controversial island territorial claims. China's interest in the South China Sea is based on both economic and strategic justifications. For economic 648931e174
